

DESCRIPTION OF TRAILS

- 1. EASY — 1 mile. Many hikers feel that this trail passes through some of the park's most beautiful scenery. Beginning at the Pavilion, trail #1 heads west down into a ravine and along lovely White River. Turning then uphill, this trail opens upon the most impressive group of earthworks in the park. Then it leads back into the woods, over a scenic boardwalk, follows a small, babbling stream, and ends at the Pavilion. A moderate trail, especially good for wildflowers and bird watching.
- 2. EASY — .75 mile. Begins behind the Pavilion, descends west into a ravine with trail #1, then follows the White River northward into a rich floodplain bottomland. Joins trail #3 briefly, then loops back south, ending at the Pavilion.
- 3. MODERATE — 1.75 miles. The longest trail in the park starts on the northwest side of the Pavilion and leads north through woodland, which includes some of Mounds' largest trees. Joining briefly with trail #2, trail #3 then follows the White River bluffs, then turns east along little Bronnenberg Creek. Continuing over a scenic boardwalk, trail #3 loops back into the woods, then emerges near the Circle Mound. The trail continues along the wood's edge through a picnic area, entering the woods once more, and finishing at the Pavilion. A long, moderate trail through a variety of terrain.
- 4. EASY — .5 mile. Begins between Great Mound and Fiddleback Mound. Trail #4 follows the ridge above White River through majestic oaks and hickories. Many twists and turns, emerging again near the Great Mound. A short, easy trail.

PLEASE STAY ON MARKED TRAILS!

INDIANA

STATE PARK

Established in 1930, Mounds State Park contains and preserves some of the finest examples of earthwork and mound building in the state of Indiana. There are 10 mounds and earthworks located within the park's boundaries ranging in size from only a few inches tall to several feet high. They were built around 150 B.C. by the Adena and Hopewell cultures primarily for religious ceremonies. Research indicates these mounds were used to keep track of the seasons, the positions of over 100 of the brighter stars, as well as the moon and visible planets. The largest and best preserved of the park's mounds is the "Great Mound," easily accessible by using trail #1. Technically referred to as a "circular enclosure," this earthwork is the largest of its kind in the state, and is nearly one quarter of a mile in circumference.

Among the first inhabitants of this area were the Adena people, dating back to 1000 B.C. Primarily a hunting/gathering culture, they left their mark by the construction of several mounds, from which the park gets its name. Although later cultures, such as the Hopewell, used some of the earthworks for burial purposes, these unique earthen features seem to have been used for astronomical observations and prehistoric calendars. Although much has been learned about the mounds and the people that built and used them, many questions remain unanswered. Why did the people disappear? What happened to them? Although many theories abound, no one has the answers.

In the early 19th century, a family of German immigrants, the Bronnensbergs, arrived and made this site their home. Owning more than 600 acres, these folks operated a large farm, with their fields and pastures located in the present-day picnic areas. They were also known to be lovers of fine horses and would hold races on what is today Mounds Road. One of the sons, Frederick Bronnenberg Jr., built a two-story brick farmhouse that stands to this day. Constructed in the 1840's, virtually every bit of the house came from the surrounding woodlands -- the foundation is limestone quarried from nearby White River, the bricks handmade on site, and most of the woodwork is tuliptree.

In 1897, some of the Bronnenberg land was sold to the Indiana Union Traction Company, which operated an amusement park in the southern end of the property. Attractions included a roller coaster, roller skating rink, shooting gallery, carousel, boat rides on the river, and pavilion with a restaurant on the first floor and a dance hall on the second. Many dance marathons of the "roaring 20's" were held here! But when Wall Street crashed and the Great Depression began, this business, like so many others, simply failed. The Madison County Historical Society then purchased the land and donated it to the state of Indiana. Mounds Park became Mounds State Park in October of 1930.
